As promised in my last newsletter, editing of the recording of our new a cappella choral piece, "One Kiss" is finally finished and it is now available online.

I set to music two poems, "To Dianeme" by Robert Herrick (1591-1674) and the other "A White Rose" by John Boyle O'Reilly (1844-1890).

I was fortunate to find three very talented people to help record the parts. We recorded one track at a time, hence the need to do so much editing to be sure all voices lined up.

Gina McCrostie doubled with me on the soprano and alto parts. You may remember Gina from my newsletter about the Mt. Tabor Coffee House. Her's is the velvety rich texture you hear in the female voices.

Stephen Brunskill doubled on the bass part. Some of you knew Stephen from our Carriage House Chorus days many years ago. After exchanging Christmas cards for several seasons now, I contacted Stephen and he was kind enough to record a few tracks of the bass part. His is the low register resonance that deepens as the notes drop lower!

The tenor voice and also doubling on the bass part is baritone, George Spitzer, an opera trained vocalist and voice teacher with whom I have the pleasure of working at Calderone School of Music. For a young man, his credentials are already impressive:

I am humbled and grateful that he would take the time to lend his fabulous voice to this recording!

The Mp3 file is included with the sheet music download at no extra charge or by itself for 99¢. You can listen to the entire piece here:

If you have been paying for anti-virus software, take a look at this.

<http://free.grisoft.com/doc/2/>

AVG offers a free anti-virus download including automatic updates. I've been using AVG for almost two years on two home computers with excellent results. This free version will not catch mal-ware or spy-ware but you can purchase an upgrade that will do that or you can use one of the other free downloads.
